WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, July 1st 1901.

The President's usual promptness in defining his position upon important matters is making his failure to either appoint a new commissioner of Pensions, or to say that he intends keeping Commissioner Evans in that position, very puzzling to everybody. The doubt is not calculated to add to the efficacy of the work of the Pension Bureau, as the employees of that establishment, whose first interest is to retain their jobs, don't know where they are at. They know that there is a radical difference of opinion as to how certain pension laws should be construed between those who are demanding the appointment of a new Commissioner of Pensions and Commissioner Evans, but they don't know which of those opinions is held by the President, and their lack of knowledge on that subject leaves them, as the saying goes, "between the devil and deep sea". The question is one that must, sooner or later, be decided by the President, and his friends and opponents agree that the sooner he does it, the better it will be for everybody concerned, himself included, as a threat has been made to expose correspondence in connection with this matter that might make a large sized scandal.

Gen. Miles has an idea it would be wise to withdraw most of our troops from Cuba now, instead of waiting until the Cuban Government is established, and he has officially recommended to Secretary Root that fifty per cent of fifty thousand troops in Cuba now, be ordered home, and the work they are doing be turned over to the Cubans. He thinks it an excellent plan to test the capacity of the Cubans to govern themselves in a small way—the preservation of peace, protection of property, etc.—but it is understood that Secretary Root is opposed to any further reductions of our troops on the Island, until the Cubans have their government established.

In a large room of the Smithsonian Institution, a permanent exhibition will shortly be thrown open under the name of the "Children's Museum." The ceilings are hung with artificial wild vines, among which are swung many cages of live singing birds, and the exhibits, which include butterflies, insects, dead and alive, models of diamonds, gold nuggets and all the commoner minerals, small animals, and many other things with which children are sufficiently familiar to be interested in, being carefully arranged for the comprehension of children. The idea of a museum especially for amusement and incidentally for the education of the children, came to Prof. S. P. Langely, a year or two ago, and he has since been arranging to put it into practical effect. The method of exhibition is not the only unique features of the new museum. It has, so far as known, been the largest museum in every museum in the world to lend all exhibits with their technical names, which is puzzling to the well informed adult, and absolutely meaningless to the child. In this museum everything is labeled with common names, and in addition, where possible, a short, fact relating thereto.

The additional claims against China put in by Germany and several other powers, which were at first so puzzling to this government, are now known to have been prompted by a greed of which the powers should be heartily ashamed. By some error in hearing, China agreed to pay a total indemnity which exceeded the aggregate demand of all the powers by $25,000,000. As soon as that became known, Germany put in a claim for $10,000,000 more and Japan for $5,000,000, and other powers proceeded to do the same. This government pronounced that the excess be deducted from the total indemnity to be paid by China, but from the manner in which the proposal was received, it is certain that it will not be accepted, and that the majority of the powers are determined to squeeze the last dollar possible out of China.

Secretary Hitchcock believes in adopting good forest ideas wherever found. An investigation here has shown him that Germany had been successfully rearing its forests, he submitted a plan for the establishment of a bureau in the Department of the Interior for the restoration of American forests by a similar plan, and it was promptly approved by the President and other members of the Cabinet, and the forestry bureau will soon be in operation.

The receipts of the government for the fiscal year just closed, exceeded its expenditures by $76,000,000, which was about $3,000,000 less than the surplus of the previous fiscal year. There will be no such surplus for the fiscal year beginning to-day, as the act of the past Congress reducing war taxes, goes into effect today and that will reduce the revenues of the government to the extent of between forty and fifty million dollars.

WE CELEBRATED!

Regardless of the Threatening weather a Large Crowd was in Attendance

The Fourth of July 1901 is a thing of the past and one long to be remembered by the residents of this village and surrounding country. At an early hour in the morning the booming of the cannon announced the birthday of another anniversary of our Nation's Independence. The weather was threatening and some of the elements did descend, but despite the rain people came from the surrounding towns and country until our city was well filled up. The street parade was not a very elaborate one, but what there was was very good and consisted of the fire department, some boys with a float and Mr. Ellihove with a tobacco planter. The band headed the procession which paraded the principal streets. Immediately after dinner the sports began, a full account of which we are unable to give this week but will next. The game of ball between Sandstone and our home team came off in a drizzling rain and was witnessed by a large crowd; the game was one sided from start to finish, Pine City taking the lead and keeping it throughout, the score at the close of the game was 7 to 0. Sandstone did not make a very good showing but was on account of the absence of some of their players, no doubt. After the ball game the sports were again resumed and continued until dark when the fire works were discharged from an elevation near the depot, which were very good and could be seen from any part of the city. The day was closed with the largest dance ever held in Pine City, and everybody enjoyed the excellent music furnished by the North branch orchestra. Supper was served at the Wilcox House and was as usual good. The dance broke up in time for the four-twenty train.

The Hog Trade.
 It is doubtful if a better satisfied lot of farmers could be found than those who delivered hogs to J. J. Madden for his last shipment. A real fat hog is a money maker both for the farmer and for the buyer, and Mr. Madden is always ready to pay the market price for good stock.

FOILS.

By Oliver Beatrice Blair.

From the Town and Country. New York. Printed by Partridge.

"But you don't know Millicent at all when you talk this way, Vance. And it isn't fair to women generally and my friend particularly for you to continue this same old line of argument."

Winifred followed her brother into the room set apart for their evening encounters and sat down rather dispiritedly upon the edge of a divan.

"Your defense of your friend is very loyal, my dear child," said the grandly patronizing reply, "but it does not invalidate in the least what I have said. A woman practicing medicine is as incongruous as a man training hags. Feminine hands were never meant for surgical operations."

"You are prejudiced, Vance," said Winifred, as she listlessly took the foil her brother offered her.

"You didn't get a diploma, and I believe you're mad at all creation to think that Millicent succeeded where you failed."

A wave of crimson crept down Vance Bishop's face, leaving it quite pale.

"Must narrowness of vision be added to your shortsightedness, Win?" he asked, with an evenness of tone his sister suspected.

"I don't care what you say to me," Winifred retorted; "you've tried to sit on me, more or less, all your life. But it's different with Millicent. She has been here four weeks now, and you are just as stubborn and rude as when she came. And though it has been hard work, with that little cripple sister of hers to support, the kindness of others in a measure helps her to get through the rough parts of her daily routine. But with all she has seen your dislike of her, your pointed avoidance, your persistent snubs, only prove she doesn't know the reason. I would rather have her think it was your aversion to her as a woman rather than your dislike of her beloved profession."

"As women practice it," said Vance, imperceptibly.

"Science, as well as art, is sexless," was Winifred's rejoinder, with an air of superiority.

"It's a tiresome subject, Win. Let's drop it. We always quarrel."

And with a smile meant to be conciliatory Vance thrust a face guard into his sister's lap.

But Winifred was in no mood for such summary treatment. This discussion of Millicent was her hobby horse, and the little animal once trotted out for riding, pranced grandly at Winifred's slightest spur. Just now Winifred was inclined to curb and execute possibly a pas seul, so irritable had she become through the persistent coldness her brother had evidenced toward her since her return.

"It was very tiresome, for the circumstance made matters somewhat awkward whenever an evening gathering of young people was in order, and Millicent could arrange to be one of Oakland's frolicsome set."

Winifred watched her brother make a number of passes over her face. Then she returned to the attack.

"Millicent has noticed your ungentlemanly attitude," pursued Winifred, in a tone so injured dignity.

"Has she complained to you?" His sister shot him an indignant glance, was about to retort hotly, changed her mind and maintained a severe silence.

"For if she has," continued Vance, with unmistakable emphasis, "she further proves she is no doctor. Physicians don't talk much, Win. You know that."

"Then it's a good thing you failed to get your diploma," returned his sister, sharply.

"See here," said Vance, good-naturedly, "what's the use of losing your temper over this—er—young woman? She—"

"She is my friend. She was my roommate at college, Vance. She has sacrificed her life for her little sister, and she is the dearest girl in the world."

Winifred's words poured forth with the vehemence of an incipient volcano.

Vance made a lunge at an unseen enemy, following it with such rapid movements that Winifred changed her position involuntarily. Her momentary tepidation turned to one of fiercer indignation as Vance, between his rapid movements, jerked out:

"I can't tolerate—women doctors. They never—know their business—lack courage—and impose upon men's credulity."

Winifred bounded from her position, her cheeks aflame, her eyes dancing like some living light. She opened her mouth to speak, but ere one word could issue the expression upon her brother's face caused her to turn toward the hanging draperies in the door to their right. For a moment a great calm seemed to rest upon her.

In the front of these curtains stood a tall girl whose striking characteristics seemed to be her clear eyes, limpid as fresh pools of water in an early spring, and the crown of nut-brown hair arranged coronal fashion upon a very womanly head.

It was Millicent, and Winifred struggled to stifle the gasp which had risen in her throat.

But Millicent's first words reassured her.

"Your mother said I'd find you here, Win," came in a voice which held no tremor;

"and you would mind going with me to my rounds this morning?"

Calb hurt his hand last night and can't manage the horses, I'm afraid."

"With alacrity and pleasure," said Winifred, seeing a pleasant face to which might have been a disagreeable countenance, "and here is Ned to take my place with you, Vance. I'll be ten minutes dressing, Millicent," and, nodding to her brother's friend, who had thus opportunely appeared, she went out. Millicent followed her.

"Ned Brice laughed as soon as he was alone with his friend.

"The warfare still rages, I see," he observed, as he proceeded to array himself for the evening boat; "can't you see, I think you're an ass, Vance. There is nothing of the 'new woman' about Miss Vance. Dr. Millicent Trevor, you must admit that."

"Oh, I admit anything if it diminishes the subject," said Vance, with a shrug of annoyance; "come, I'm ready for a good tilt. Don't put the guard on your foot. It's much more exciting without."

"Exciting? Yes—but—"

"But me no bats. Let's see what stuff you're made of this morning."

And, following instructions, as he invariably did with Vance, Ned made a wide aim at the intended mark, and in an instant had severed to its resting place in Vance's side.

The young man leaped to the floor with bare feet. Ned stood gauging stupidly at the prostrate figure. The crimson staining Vance's jacket bled him to his senses. He hurriedly bent over his friend, tearing open his shirt. The wound spouted out its warm, red stream.

"Good heavens! Vance, old fellow, this is awful! I didn't mean—"

Vance opened his eyes.

Peace in the Philippines.

Peace in the Philippines is bound to prove difficult to all concerned. Warring nations, whether they be in the Philippines or elsewhere, are equally difficult to restrain. If your stomach has rebelled, submit it. It is Hatter's Stomach Pills, and it cures constipation, indigestion, flatulency, nervousness and dyspepsia. His Egg Business.

"I'm going into the egg business," said one city wite to another.

"That chicken is difficult to manage in any considerable number, I am told."

"I intend to discontinue with chickens entirely. I shall simply raise egg plants."

BETTER THAN CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

Jelmre, Kan., July 1st.—Mrs. Anna Jones Freeman, daughter of Mr. G. Jones, of Burdett, and one of the most popular ladies in Hodgeman County, has been a martyr to headache for years. It has made her life a continual misery to her. She suffered pains in the small of the back, and had every symptom of Kidney and Urinary trouble.

To-day she is as well as any lady in this state.

This remarkable change was due entirely to a remedy recently introduced here. It is called Dodd's Kidney Pills, and many people claim it to be an infallible cure for Kidney Disease, Rheumatism and Heart Trouble.

Mrs. Freeman heard of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and almost with the first dose she grew better. In a week her headaches and other pains had gone, and she had left behind her all her ills, and days of misery.

A medicine that can do for any one what Dodd's Kidney Pills have done for this lady, is very sure soon to be universally used, and already the demand for these pills has increased wonderfully in Pawnee and Big Horn Counties, where the particulars are Mrs. Freeman's case and its cure are known.

Women Must Sleep.

Avoid Nervous Prostration.

If you are dangerously sick what is the best duty of your physician? His quiet the nervous system, he deadens the pain, and you sleep well.

For the reason that when you ceased to be regular in your course, your irregularity without cause, and your sleepless nights, there is serious trouble somewhere, and nervous prostration is sure to follow.

You ought to know that indigestion, exhalation of womb displacements, fainting, dizziness, headache, and backache send the nerves wild with fright, and you cannot sleep.
