WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent
 WASHINGTON, April 14th, 1902.
 Ever since the passage of the oleomargarine law the Senate has devoted itself to the subject of Chinese exclusion and while it is assumed when the measure was called up that two or three days would suffice to dispose of the matter, no vote will be taken until Wednesday and the outcome is more problematical than it was a week ago. Senators Hoar, Dillingham, Gallinger and Cullion have all declared themselves opposed to the present measure on one ground or another and it is regarded as quite possible that the result will be the adoption of the amendment offered by Senator Platt and which consists of substituting the Geary law for the present bill and re-enacting it.

On last Tuesday the House began its consideration of the Cuban reciprocity bill and has been debating the matter ever since. As the debate has proceeded the opposition has dwindled and it is generally conceded that the measure will pass without amendment. The policy of the friends of the bill in preventing the setting of a date on which to vote has been proven judicious as the members who opposed the bill have wanted of the long debate and have lost interest. It is now predicted that a vote will be taken on Thursday of this week. So far the discussion has been characterized by some very able speeches, notably those of Messrs. Tamm, Grosvenor and Long and it has been a matter of interest that these speeches have been almost entirely directed at the opposing factions of the republicans, little attention having been paid to the demerits or their contentions.

An interesting session in the Senate last Friday was precipitated by Senator Depue who had, during the morning hours on Thursday, taken occasion to express his views on the proposed amendment to the constitution providing that senators shall be elected by popular vote. Mr. Depue gave notice that he would move an amendment providing for federal supervision of elections of senators and by so doing criticized the election laws in some southern states, mentioning by name, Mississippi and Kentucky. On Friday afternoon Senator Blackburn of the latter state replied to the junior Senator from New York and his remarks were suggestive in the extreme and at all times explicated himself to purely parliamentary usage. Wishing to deny certain statements of the New York Senator he said, "It goes without saying that the truth is innocent of any appearance in that statement." The passage at arms between the senators amply demonstrated that men possessing a fine command of English need resort to a preference of billingsgate to express their difference of opinion in most forcible terms.

General Schofield appeared before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs on the last week and presented the testimony in regard to the proposed army reorganization bill. According to his findings he stated that the present General of the Army, Miles, was not on speaking terms with the President or the Secretary of War and clearly demonstrated the futility of expecting the best administration of the army under a system which made it practically compulsory upon the President to retain as his chief subordinate a man with whom he would in no way agree. According to General Schofield, the staff would need to be relieved of the Secretary of War and the administration of many details for which his special civilian training has not fitted him and the chief of staff of a chief of staff of the President would have far more to do with the Com-mander-in-Chief and the first military officer.

The absence of President Roosevelt's occupying the Presidential chair for some weeks longer, during his first term, than any of his immediate predecessors seem to be growing. The national committee appointed to consider the advisability of changing the date of inauguration met here recently and determined upon the last Thursday in April as the most favorable date. There are now forty-three governors of states who have accepted their appointment to the committee and it seems probable that, by their combined effort, the necessary change in the constitution will be accomplished. As has been pointed out, it is not only the danger to the health of the officials who take part in an inauguration which will be obelated by the change to a date when the weather is more element, but the health of many thousands of visitors who flock to Washington, and who, being away from home, are often the most exposed.

The President has found in the person of Mr. Robert J. Wynn, a long time newspaper correspondent of Washington, a First Assistant Postmaster General and it is expected that Mr. Wynn will assume the duties of his office by the first of May. Mr. Roosevelt has also selected a successor to Postion Commissioner Evans, Mr. Eugene F. Ware being the appointee. Mr. Ware is a resident of Topeka and his appointment will be a source of gratification to the Kansas delegation.

The President and Mrs. Roosevelt have returned from their trip to the Charleston Exposition and the former declares that he is much rested. There are few people who find such a journey restful but it seems to be one of the President's characteristics that all he requires in the way of a rest is a change of activity. It is hoped that the President's visit may result in an increased attendance at the exposition which has been falling far behind expenses notwithstanding the excellence of the exhibits and the general arrangements. Miss Roosevelt also, has returned from her visit to Mrs. Leonard Wood in Havana.

It is the intention of Mrs. Roosevelt to give a series of fetes champetres on the lawn of the White House. The contour of the White House grounds is particularly convenient for such entertainments as high land next to the fence on both the East and West sides make it impossible for the curious, who would naturally be attracted by the affair, to see for any distance into the grounds. This is not true of the South edge of the grounds, but that is so far from the White House that the presence, outside of the fence, of a large number of spectators would not prove embarrassing to the hostess or her guests.

The dance given by the Base Ball boys on last Friday evening was one of the most enjoyable parties ever given in this place. The boys did not realize but very little money but they did a little better than clear expenses and then they furnished those who did patronize them a first-class time. The Schmidt orchestra, of North Branch, furnished the music, which was very fine, and the supper at the Wilcox House was up to the standard that they have established for midnight suppers.

When you buy seeds, buy the best. The best is the cheapest, and you get the best at Madden's.

Wednesday afternoon what might have proved a serious accident occurred by the tipping over of a sailboat in the middle of the river just west of the rail road bridge, in which were Louis Kowalke, eldest son of Otto Kowalke, John Breckenridge, eldest son of J. Y. Breckenridge and Wayne Lones, second son of J. L. Lones. The boys suffered no other injury than a good scare and a thorough wetting in ice water.

Monday afternoon at about 1:15 the fire bell rang and immediately after the fire whistle on the flour mill blew, the cause of the alarm being the burning of a pile of cord wood set on fire by the south bound passenger train on the N. P. The fire department responded at once and in a short time the fire was out. If the engine had not been on hand there would have been quite a quantity of wood burned, as the yard is full of cord wood, and with the wind in the direction it was, it would have swept the whole town.

One of the oldest landmarks of Pine City has been taken away this week by the tearing down of the old Brackett house, owned by L. H. McKusick, and which was situated on the corner east of Mr. McKusick's residence. The house was built by Mr. Brackett over thirty years ago and was used as a mill boarding house. Mr. McKusick purchased it some years ago, and this week J. W. Axell tore it down. There was only one house in Pine City that was older than the Brackett house and that is the main part of the Pioneer House.

The Pine City Gun Club.

The following is the scores of the Pine City Gun Club. The first shoot was Saturday afternoon and out of 25 birds apiece the following scores were made:

P. S. Murray, 21, Otto Kowalke, 16; P. H. O'Brien, 16; P. W. McAllen, 15; Mrs. P. S. Murray, 18; R. C. Saunders, 17.

The second shoot was on Wednesday afternoon and was as follows:

P. S. Murray, 15; R. C. Saunders, 13; Otto Kowalke, 13; G. H. White, 19; P. H. O'Brien, 19; P. W. McAllen, 17; C. H. Laing, 18; E. L. Saavey, 20; Robert Derr, 17; Mrs. P. S. Murray, 19; R. H. Blankenship, 14; R. G. Wiseman, 3.

In justice to Mr. Wiseman we would state that this was his first attempt at trap shooting and that with a little practice he will be able to hold his own with the rest of them. The Pine City gun club in the last two shoots have made scores that any gun club need not be ashamed of, as it is far above the average. If they keep up their present gait, Pine City will see some fine shooting before the summer is over.

Resolutions of Sympathy.

At a meeting of the Women's Reading Club of Pine City, held on April 9th, 1902, the following tribute was offered to the memory of our departed member, Mrs. Minnie C. Brown:

WHEREAS: Death has entered our Club, and taken from us our friend and co-worker, Minnie C. Brown, we mingle our feelings of sincere regret and sorrow at our loss, and extend heartfelt sympathy to those bereft of a devoted wife, mother and daughter. That we hereby express our appreciation of her many noble qualities, and the bright example her life has been as wife, mother and friend. May we strive to emulate her spirit of charity, forbearance and affection toward each other. Our friend is gone, leaving pleasant memories which years cannot dim.

Resolved: That these resolutions be spread upon the records of the club; a copy sent to the family of the deceased, and that they be printed in the Pine County Pioneer and the Pine Piker.

THE STORY TELLER

ACCORDING TO SCRIPTURE

By S. HOMER HENLEY.

SAND. Everywhere, dazzling white and glaring hot sand, smoothly level for little distances, then following swiftly in breast-like mounds. But always the same blinding white stretch to castles, as in some desert of the East. And a brass-hue sky-tinger with a setting of copper sun, blazing infernally.

The American spoke first. "Well, you've got me dead to rights out here. What are you going to do about it?"

The Mexican's only reply was to point silently ahead. His big jaw was set immovably and his heavy eyelids dropped over his eyes more than he. His companion watched him furtively in growing apprehension.

Since dawn they had ridden over maddening miles of this infernal desert, without the exchange of a single word. The American's pride of race in not "wanting to be a d---" ("greaser") by speaking first had been gradually but inexorably borne down in part by the terrifying stillness and monotony of this blistered waste, but much more by the unnatural silence and immobility maintained by the other. He had always reckoned himself a fairly brave man, but the unaccountability of the whole situation was getting upon his nerves.

What a fool he had been to ride out, absolutely unarmed, into this pale sea with this granite-faced devil, he felt, avowedly, that he would give all he possessed to mash that grim mouth, to crush the light from those narrow, steely eyes. Presently he began to speak rapidly, thickly, as one hurried on by an uncontrollable something apart from himself.

"Look here, now, I blame you. I know that I lent you the rifle until she came to me. But how was I going to know that she would kill herself because I had to go away? Of course, I knew you loved her, but I didn't see any reason for that stopping me. Oh, I know you'd have married her where I couldn't, but that's just the point, I couldn't. I engaged to a girl up in Nevada, and all my prospects depend upon my marrying her, so you see how I was misled, don't you?"

The Mexican gave no sign that he had heard. His left hand, holding the thin reins that ran to the dejected mouth of the weary mule, rested on the high pommel of the "buck" saddle; and his right hand clasped, with quiet significance, the butt of the heavy revolver in its stamped-leather holster. Not a muscle of his face relaxed its fixed strain. It made the American's jaws ache to look at him.

He waited mechanically for the answer he knew would not come; then burst out again in a frenzied effort to batter down the stony ramparts of the other's deadly silence.

"You bound, you! You'd have done the same thing in my place. You'd have done worse if you could. Why don't you say something, you dirty greaser dog? You're a filthy coward! Get down off that horse and fight me like a man. No, of course you won't. Ugh. What a beautiful fool I was to think that you would help me to get away from her relatives. You would show me a safe way across the desert and over the frontier would you? Yes, you would. Tsk! You dog, you! What I want to know, is what are you waiting for with me? Answer me that. Answer me. What are you going to do with me? Hey? Say something, can't you? Say something, can't you? My voice had climaxed to a furious yell; but now he fell quiet suddenly, watching with fascinated eyes the phlegmatic mare of the utterly unmoved Mexican. His burst of rage had been but a sorry cloak for the cold terror that was clanking at his heart. He realized this with increasing alarm; and with a start, as if the Mexican knew it. In spite of the terrific heat his face and hands were clammy cold, and he shivered fitfully. They rode on through the long afternoon in clammy silence; but was unbroken save for the muffled shuffling of the Mustang's feet on the pillow, said, "The American had fallen into a coil as gently, and rode like a sick man, his

AN ANSWER TO PRAYER.

A Nervous Young Mother's Comfort From an Incident of Paterson's Great Fire.

The night of the great fire in Paterson, N. J., some one, frightened by the approach of the devouring way of flame, moved a grand piano from his home and left it in a nearby cemetery, reports the New York World.

The afternoon of the same day two people had been in the place and left a small white basket covered with flowers and tears. There had been music in the brief service read in the chapel of the cemetery, for the couple were strangers—English people seeking a new home in America, and only stranger's eyes were there to look upon their grief when the little girl died.

But there was no one to be secured at a moment's notice, and it had all been so unexpected and sudden. So the strong-shouldered young Englishman, with a mist of tears veiling his blue eyes, put his arm around her very distress and tried to lead her away. They were to take the train that afternoon, and he urged her to make haste.

But she would wait a few steps and then turn back and stretch her empty arms toward that little grave, for they throw herself into her husband's arms in an agony of weeping. Time after time she tried to go away, and a sexton who had taken up his spade dropped it every time she looked around, and seemed to have nothing to do but gaze straight ahead of him into the bare branched trees.

Sadly the husband and wife entered the station and secured the tickets for Chicago.

They took their train when it was called, silently, and started out into the darkness of the night.

But in the city they had left behind them another tragedy was beginning. Flares, shot with spades, leaped upward to the sky, and little tongues of fire lapped fortimes up as kites lap up saucers full of milk. Out of the young and thoughtless were untroubled, and late that night when a company of young folks were returning from a party and saw the light in the church yard they thought only of the novelty of the scene.

The huge triangle shone dark against the red reflections of the fire, and stood with one leg over a little grave as horses sometimes stand above their fallen masters after a battle morning. "The boys and girls were too gay to think of that, but something, maybe it was a mother's prayer, made one of the pretty lassies turn suddenly into the yard and up to the instrument. She motioned one of the company to open it, for it was unhooked, and then, when some one brought her a box to sit on she began to play a soft piano, and, in a mellow, clear and sweet above a rush and clamor of the street, rose a sweet-toned voice singing: "Angels Brought Light and Fair."

The little group gathered about stopped laughing, and the lights showed that their faces had grown solemn and still. She finished, the song and then, with some strange yearning at her heart, and all unconscious of the little newly made grave just at her feet, began to sing: "A Sleep in Heaven!"

Softly, reverently, she sang it through, and then it was that on the westwind into her husband's eyes and smiled.

"I don't know why it is, dear," she whispered, "but it has just come to me that it is all right, some way, it is all right."

OUR EQUINE FRIENDS.

Breaking a Colt to Halters Described by a Man Who Had Considerable Experience.

My weanling colts had never been handled, and having run with their dam until midwinter, were wild as deer. To secure them until they became quiet enough to be haltered was the problem. Take about 30 feet of half-inch rope, knot one end, so there will be a length of 20 feet left in the end of your hand by the plugging of the knot. On the other end fasten a 1 1/2 inch halter ring, then tie a knot in the rope, leaving enough left to encircle the colt's neck when drawn taut. The knot prevents choking. Now tie the end of the rope to the ring and you are ready.

Runk the horse by throwing out some feed in a large yard. Have an assistant hold one end of the rope. By moving carefully you can soon nose the colt. Let him circle around until well tired out, before going to the head. As soon as possible, take two half hitches, as shown in the left-hand figure, around his nose, take the bend of the lower hitch, pass it under his head, and make a second hitch.

HANDY COLT HALTER.

The other from the top downward, then up to the ears, fastening the rope in hand as you go. An excellent halter, capable of holding anything, is thus secured, as the right-hand figure shows. If after being drawn around for some time, he proves stubborn and will not follow, take a piece of clothing, such as a handkerchief, and tie it around his neck, leaving enough rope for snugness over his hind quarters almost to the hocks (the knot remaining over his head). He will yield a little, and you can then proceed to the halter, and on feeling the pull behind he will move. Never strike him, and do not pull the rope. If the dam is worked, the best way is to slip on a halter when the colt is only a few days old, and tie alongside his head, but if unbroken when a good time to work with the dam, as the colt is not likely to hurt when they tie itself.—J. C. Smith, in Farm and Home.

EPILEPSY IN HOGS.

This Disease, Commonly Known as Blind Stagers, Readily Yields to Careful Treatment.

Blind stagers, or, in medical parlance, epilepsy, in pigs, is quite common. It may be the effect of various causes, but the most frequent is the condition indicates impairment of nutrition of the brain and nervous system. This may be brought about by constant stimulation of the brain, and occasional feeding upon coarse meal and colicment. A wet, uncomfortable bed often leads to the disease in young pigs. A course of two close breeding develops the disease. The symptoms of an attack of epilepsy are sometimes different in different animals. Sometimes the pig stunts and froths at the mouth, and in a few moments staggers and falls as if in a fit. After lying awhile, it recovers and seems in its normal condition again, perhaps for a few days. In some cases the fit occurs again, often proving fatal. Sometimes the pig forces his nose into a corner of the pen and stands trembling with convulsions, and suddenly darts around the pen a few times and falls motionless upon the floor. When symptoms of staggers are developed a good dry feed and ten or 12 drops of chloride of iron twice a day for a few days in their food. As a preventive when pigs show symptoms of disease, withhold the food until they are calmer and powdered charcoal for a few days. Supplying dry, comfortable quarters and feeding the young pigs with a good supply of milk and occasionally a mess of boiled flaxseed will be particularly good, as containing a large proportion of oleaginous matter. Very cabbage, green feed and molasses are helpful as a varied diet. As in many other things a due regard to their condition that seems to prevent the disease, but they should be obliged to resort to the various remedies, and then, perhaps, fail to restore the animal to health.—Eastern Exchange.

Given Feed with Grain.

At the Cornell university experiment station, a test was made of the comparative feeding values of ground feed and corn meal. A mixture consisting of 20 pounds of ground feed and 100 pounds of corn meal, the ground feed and corn meal mixture was prepared as to have the same nutritive value as ground wheat. To each of the three lots of animals skim milk was fed alike. The results of the experiment are reported in Bulletin No. 7. Wheat alone made a somewhat better showing than corn meal. The corn meal lot consumed the least food and made the most milk. The ground feed and corn meal mixture gave the greatest gain and produced cheaper pork than ground wheat. The experiment showed that when wheat and corn are fed alone, produced the best results.

Respectable men being made on a party to hunt for a fox, the party was made up of a man who had never before made a fox hunt, and a man who had never before made a fox hunt. It is a simple matter to hunt for a fox, but it is a simple matter to hunt for a fox. It is a simple matter to hunt for a fox, but it is a simple matter to hunt for a fox.

Change of Life.

Some Sensible Advice to Women by Mrs. E. Sailer.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM—When I passed through what is known as 'change of life,' I had two years' suffering—sudden heat, and as quiet as a mouse, and my appetite was variable and I never could get my weight back."

Another element figuring largely in determining the measure of profits is selling when the lambs are finished. It does not pay to feed a fat lamb for an uncertain chance of rise in price. The altogether best rule is to get your lambs ready for the market in the shortest possible time and let them grow 70 pounds at five months old. Lambs that were not fat I should hold them over on light grain feeding and finish on grass. Corn alone is the grain for fattening, but clover hay for roughage, with other hay or fodder, all oil meal or cotton seed meal.—H. P. Miller, in Ohio Farmer.

STABLE CONVENIENCE.

How to Make an Excellent Self-Feeder for Ear Cows for the Fattening Lamb.

Make an X of two 2x4-inch pieces, five feet long, so that they cross each other two feet from lower ends and the top of the frame. This is to support the floor of feeder. Also in angles of sides of frame nail two pieces out the proper shape to fit, so they will be one foot apart from outside to outside. This makes the throat of feeder that wide. Make two of these frames, one for each end. The middle should be supported by a bench. Use eight-inch boards for sides of feeder. In boarding up the sides place the lower edge of bottom board six inches from floor of trough, which gives room for corn to feed out. Include sketch of feeder.—John S. Corlies, in National Stockman.

STOCK AND DAIRY HINTS.

Impatience with an impatient or restless cow will render her worthless. The Farmers' Tribune says that in feeding hogs "it is better to abandon the evening meal than to feed it too late."

Any surplus skim milk may be fed to growing colts or to the cows themselves. Let them run it through the machine and replace the cream you have taken out.

A little time each day spent in currying the calves and heifers will be well rewarded. It gives them comfort and keeps them on good terms with their attendants. This will be money when they come to be shorn.

The majority of farmers have grown corn with the sole idea that the grain was the only valuable part of the crop. Some have learned that the stover properly used makes a valuable feed. A few more drought years will enforce the lesson on more farmers.—National Rural.

American Jew Gems.
Proof of America's prosperity is illustrated by the activity of American gem buyers. In every diamond market in Europe they are seeking to secure precious stones for the American market. At the sales at Paris, St. Petersburg and Amsterdam the American buyers are securing the most costly gems offered. A diamond was recently in London when a New York buyer secured the Prince Edward of York diamond, regarded as one of the most perfect diamonds which have ever appeared in London. This pear-shaped stone, of malleable color and purity, weighs 60½ carats. The stone has never been exhibited in public, and has never left the hands of the rough-diamond syndicate until recently. An English syndicate paid £1,000 for a three-month option on the stone, but the American paid $100,000 cash for it.

Women All Beautiful in 1902.
If there are now few women of the all-adoring "Mabels" and "Gosses" of olden days, says the London Mail, it is equally certain that the plain woman has become a rare specimen of beauty. The healthiest and most beautiful women of the present day are those who are in the habit of eating plain food, and whose dresses are simple and unadorned. The plain woman, an unduly dressy, has been left behind with the dead, and some nineteenth century. We are all modernly beautiful in 1902.
