Pertinent Pointers for Practical Farmers

DRY ROT OFTEN CAUSES 50 PER CENT POTATO LOSS

Bins Should be Thoroughly Disinfected for New Crop.

"Will it pay to store my potatoes on the farm? Will market conditions be better in the spring? These are the questions that should be asked before planting potatoes, declares R. C. Rose, plant pest specialist at University Farm, St. Paul, who states that the potato cellar or storeroom must be so constructed and taken care of as to hold the potatoes with the least possible loss from rot and other causes.

"Dry rot will often produce a loss of 50 per cent of the potatoes before spring, said Mr. Rose. It is caused by a fungus that generally attacks the tubers through wounds and bruises. Therefore careful handling after digging will have an important bearing on the control of rot in storage. Potatoes should be thoroughly disinfected before placing in the bins. The fungus produces a brown dry rot within the potato which causes the outer surface to become considerably shriveled. In very damp storage the surface of the tubers is covered with a white moldlike growth. Under low temperatures the spread of this rot is very slow and hence less destructive than at higher temperatures. Old bins and storage cellars, especially when they have had considerable able dry rot from previous crops, are heavily infected with spores of the dry rot fungus. They should be thoroughly cleaned out and disinfected by spraying or swabbing walls, floors and ceilings with a solution of copper sulfate, one pound to 10 gallons of water, or a formaldehyde solution of one pint of 10 gallon water. The bins should be well aired and dried out before the potatoes are placed in them.

The best storage temperature is between 35 degrees and 45 degrees F. At these points storage roots spread more slowly and normal shrinkage in weight is less than at higher temperatures. Large quantities of warm potatoes should not be placed in a cool cellar, as this causes the air to become heavily charged with moisture and the tubers will heat. It is a good plan to leave the potatoes out-of-doors overnight and bring them into storage in the morning before they are heated by day temperatures. Storage cellars should have ventilators in the roof for the removal of warm air and moisture. These can be regulated by stuffing them with hay or straw. Potatoes require a limited amount of air which should be provided for by an intake opening at the bottom of the bins. Otherwise moisture collecting on the surface of the bins will result in too much humidity.

Millets Lost by Infectious Abortion. "Buy only from herds known to be free from infectious abortion," is the advice of Dr. C. P. Fitch, chief of the division of veterinary medicine at University Farm, St. Paul in Minnesota cattle breeders. Breeders have learned to buy only from herds tested and found free from infectious abortion is just as important.

Millions of dollars lost annually from the ravages of this disease could be saved by proper prevention by avoiding its spread through purchase of carefully tested cattle, declared Dr. Fitch.

America's Ex-Service Men Best Treated of Any in World
Republican Administration Spends More for World War Veterans than for Any Item Except the Public Debt.
U. S. REPRESENTATIVE CARL W. RIDDICK (MONTANA), SENIORITY HOUSE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

In November, 1918, the people elected a Republican Congress. The first session of this newly elected Republican Congress began May 19, 1919. With it began practically all Federal aid for relief and assistance of those who served in the World War. An elaborate program was formulated providing for hospital and medical aid for all disabled and diseased ex-service men. The program included those suffering from mental diseases as a result of their war experience; vocational training and rehabilitation; also financial allotments for those engaged in such training; also compensation for men totally or partially disabled, and for their dependents; and for the dependents of those who died as a result of injury or disease contracted while in the service of their country.

There was expended to July 1, 1922, for the purpose of carrying out this program this sum of $1,435,854,352. In addition an appropriation of $423,035,842, has just been made by the Congress for the Veterans Bureau for the coming fiscal year. This is a great appropriation than made for any other purpose except in payment of the public debt.

Following the war the administration of relief for ex-service men was divided among several bureaus and this necessitated tremendous overhead expense, eating up a disproportionate amount of money appropriated for aid of World War veterans and it occasioned endless delay in handling ex-service men's cases and out them to unfair expense. To remedy these evils the Republican Congress passed a measure, combining all agencies dealing with ex-service men under the Veterans Bureau. Following the war, hundreds of thousands of veterans permitted their insurance to lapse, largely because of the slipshod manner in which their claims were handled under the Democratic administration. At the request of representatives of the ex-service men the Republican Congress made it possible for all ex-service men whose policies had lapsed to be reinstated at any time prior to March 4, 1926.

The hospitalization and medical treatment of ex-service men was found to be unsatisfactory and Congress transferred 99 hospitals to use of the Veterans Bureau. The number of beds in these hospitals taken over by the Veterans Bureau is in excess of 25,000. There were many ex-service men living in remote sections of the country who were not aware of the benefits they could receive and should be receiving from the government under the Veterans Bureau. In order that no worthy ex-service man entitled to benefits of any kind might be neglected, the Veterans Bureau conducted a drive in which over 175,000 ex-service men were interviewed and 110,000 new claims were filed and handled as a result.

As a result of this tremendous program of Federal aid to ex-service men, all of which has been put into effect by the Republican Party and the money for which has been appropriated by a Republican Congress, the following summarization may be given:

- (1) Over 240,000 ex-service men have received hospital treatment; 30,000 ex-service men are now receiving treatment in hospitals; over 1,000,000 ex-service men have been called for examination in order to ascertain if they should receive hospital or medical treatment.
- (2) Over 150,000 ex-service men have entered vocational training and 150,000 more have been declared eligible for vocational training.
- (3) Compensation for disabled ex-service men or their dependents is being paid out at a rate in excess of $1,000,000 in cash every day, including Sundays.
- (4) Over 20,000 medical examinations are being made free every month in order to ascertain the physical and mental treatments needed by afflicted ex-service men.
- (5) Over 1,000 new claims are being handled every day by the Veterans Bureau and all work in that bureau is practically current and being conducted at a minimum loss of time and a minimum expense both to the government and to the ex-service man concerned.
- (6) An insurance business for over 600,000 ex-service men is being conducted by the government without any cost of administration to ex-service men, at premium rates far below those private companies charge for like policies.

A Triumph for Value
In the past two months Firestone are universally equipping with Firestone Cords.
This steadily increasing public preference is proof of the recognition by car owners of the greater values offered by Firestone. It is a tribute to Firestone men—all stockholders in the company—all actuated by the operating principle of Most Miles per Dollar.
The high average performance of Firestone Cords is without equal in the annals of tire making and is reflected by the general tendency to specify Firestone for hard service. Taxicab and bus lines, buying tires by the mile, are universally equipping with Firestone Cords.
There are many reasons for the high quality of Firestone tires but chief among the special manufacturing processes are double gum-dipping, thus eliminating internal friction by insulating each cord strand, and air-bag cure, insuring a well-balanced and perfectly shaped product.
Don't speculate in tires—you will find the right combination of price and quality in Firestone. Come in and let us tell you about the service these Cords are giving other car-owners whom you know.

MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR LATE PASTOR

Dr. Keister, district superintendent for this district, assisted by Rev. Buckton of the Fresno district, conducted memorial services at the Methodist church here Sunday morning for the late Rev. Orrock. Dr. Keister delivered a wonderful sermon, and during the course of the devotions read the following memoirs written by Dr. John Ceage, superintendent of the Fergus Falls district, for years a close associate of Mr. Orrock.

While this must be a time of tears and regrets, yet it is in no sense a time of defeat, or incomprehensible grief. For we meet today, not to wait at the foot of one of the fallen and defeated in the battle of life, but to have our humble, the sorrowful part, in the coronation of another of the victors of the Cross.

The Rev. James A. Orrock was born at Santiago, Minn., Jan. 22nd, 1873; and departed this life triumphantly in the faith of the Gospel, at Thief River Falls, Minn., Aug. 20th, 1922, aged forty-nine years and seven months.

While he was yet very young, his parents moved to Millbank, South Dakota, and again a little later to the state of Illinois, where his mother died about thirty-three years ago. Later, he returned to his native state, to which his life and services have been given ever since. For several years as a young man, he taught school; but in October, 1900, he definitely and finally began his work as a minister of the Gospel, entering the work at the Minnesota Conference in the southern part of the state.

In his twenty-three years of service as a good minister of Jesus Christ, he has had the following parishes: the Minnesota Conference—Hendricks, Franklin, Walnut Grove, Dover, Lakefield, Wahabasha; and in the Northern Minnesota Conference—Hector, Deer River, Perham, Thief River Falls, Repids and Pine City. Some days ago, when his case became critical while under treatment at Cass Lake, he was brought to the hospital in Thief River Falls, his former parishes, and at the earnest request of his former congregation here, he is to find his last earthly resting place among the people, who gladly will make and keep that resting place beautiful.

His career as a Christian minister has been characterized by earnest sincerity, and unflinching conscientiousness. As he came to the delivery of his message to his people, he brought with him a large measure of the tender sense of responsibility, the unwavering sense of duty, the unshakable sense of loyalty to truth and righteousness, and of quiet, strong courage, which knew no fear. His advocacy of the cause of public good and safety in every phase of his ministry, won for him at once the admiration of all true friends of civic, social, and personal righteousness, and often brought him the dislike and fear of those whose personal interests and privileges were imperiled. But this price, as a good, true, and loyal soldier of Jesus Christ he was willing to pay; and several of his charges take the credit of his better day in short and candidly good from his ministry.

As a man among men, he was the friend of all. Always approachable, and always humanly sympathetic, he was sympathetic, but then strongly held a helpful acquaintance with the busy man of the streets. Some never found him hard to get acquainted with, and many friendships of the finest quality will linger along the pathway of his true and wholesome service.

As a minister, and a member of a conference, he was a brother indeed, and greatly enjoyed and prized the fellowship of his brother ministers. He was always to cooperate whenever and wherever he could be of help, in a friendly and considerate, especially to his treatment of the younger men who might be his neighbors in the work. There will be a large company of men in both of the Minnesota Conferences who will sincerely sorrow for his going.

As a pastor of the Bank he was both faithful and true. How often in the dark valley has he comforted and cheered others with the faith in which he has now himself triumphantly passed on! How often during the the afflictions of these latter years, when others probably kept away, has this man who so well knew the dangers, but in whose heart there was no fear, which could deter him in the performance of his Christian duty, gone to the stricken, as he sat with the afflicted and anxious, ministered to their needs and then laid away their dead, when no others would be found to care for them. With what satisfaction has he followed at the window, and the spring, to see them to his Master and all the way to his resurrection in the sky.

longing and purposes of his heart, as well as in some of the marked qualifications of his ministry, and there will be a great company of good men and women, stretching all the way from Hendricks, where the boy preacher began his ministry, to Pine City, where he delivered his last message, calling his fellowmen to Christ, who will testify in the tidings of his translation comes. "He led me to Christ, and into the church!"

He was married to Miss Georgiana Knowlton at Becker, Minn., December 30th, 1893. Two children came to bless their union, Roland O. and Eva E., both of whom are with their mother today, as they pass through this great sorrow together. But theirs is not the sorrow of those "who have no hope." There is but the sadness of those who in the faith of Him, who is the Lord of life and death, and who ever liveth, never say goodbye to loved ones for the last time. There is the rich inheritance of those who will carry with them in all the coming days the memories which always bless the remembering ones. We may all sympathize with them today, but we cannot commiserate them. For to them now belongs the inheritance that never fades.

It is hard indeed to think of him as dead. His rugged body, his abundant strength, his constant faith and good cheer—they speak not of death, but of life. To the writer of this brief sketch, who has known him through many years, and who has been closely associated with him through much of his ministry, the tidings of his going came like a blow. Hopes and plans alike perished with the coming of that word. But when we remember his Lord and ours, and the faith eternal which makes death but an incident in the endless life, we need not give him up, and we will not, for "He is not dead—he is just away."

AUTO POLO A STATE FAIR FEATURE

Auto polo, admitted to be the most dangerous game in the entertainment and world, will be a daily feature of the Minnesota State Fair, September 2 to 9.

The original teams which invented the game six years ago will play at the fair. Scores of teams have exploited the game here and there since its origin, but no players have ever equalled the original ones in daring and skill in the handling of cars. The game will be played with such daunt and vim at the fair this year, as to put all previous performances in the Minnesota State Fair, September 2 to 9, to discard.

Auto polo has been engaged as a part of the great auto racing program of the fair, staged September 2, 6, and 9, which will be completed in by all the leading dirt track drivers of the world. World's records are expected to be broken for nearly all distances by Sig Haugdahl, in his 3-mile-a-minute car.

How Long Would This Load of Coal Last in Your Range?

Some ranges are hungry, positively hungry for fuel. They eat it up as though it didn't cost anything. When your range gets too hungry it is cheaper to get rid of it.

But the next time you buy, get a range that doesn't need more and more fuel as it grows older.

Buy a Monarch Malleable Range. It gives the same satisfactory service at the same low fuel cost after ten or twenty years as when it is new.

If you know the real facts you wouldn't even consider anything except a range built of malleable iron, riveted tight and solid to heavy steel plates, protected safely against rusting or burning out.

Come in and let us show you how a range ought to be built—and how the Monarch is built. The surprising part of it is that some of the ranges built in the ordinary way sell for more money than the Monarch.

Hence the Wistful Look.
 "What is the old gentleman with such a wistful look on his face who is bidding farewell to that busy fellow?"

"That's a college professor taking leave of a football star who sat in his classroom for four years and inhaled little Latin and less Greek. The young man is going away to accept a position as a coach at $1500 a year while the professor will stay on the job for $1000."

Joe Pulkrehek and Tom Kopacek left for Olivia, Minn., for a visit. From there they go to St. Paul to take in the state fair next week.

Sixteen months ago the Republican Party took over the management of the largest business concern in the world. It found the organization of this concern utterly demoralized as a result of eight years of mismanagement, gross mismanagement and class legislation. There was a bonded indebtedness of $2,397,000,000. Government bonds were selling at 83 cents on the dollar. There were outstanding loans to foreign countries of $1,000,000,000, for which there was no written evidence of indebtedness, much less any business or legal agreement as to how and when the loans and interest were to be paid. The discount rate at Federal Reserve Banks was 7.5 per cent. for gilt edge loans. Five million were sacrificed in ill-fated ventures. Farmers faced bankruptcy. Hard times prevailed. Business lived from hand to mouth. Everything needed readjustment and reconstruction. Such, in a broad way, were the conditions prevailing when this administration took control of the country and the present Republican Congress was called into special session.

Today we have a President whose wise, businesslike, constructive policies have won the confidence and affection of the American people. He has surrounded himself with a cabinet composed of men endowed with common sense, especially qualified for the work of their departments and devoted to the promotion of public welfare. As soon as the administration assumed control it called into special session the Republican Congress to assist it in straightening out the situation. Since then the executive and the legislative branches of the government, both under Republican control, have worked together.

As a result of their joint effort there has been within the last 16 months a marvelous transformation. The bonded indebtedness has been reduced by $1,017,000,000. Today every issue of Liberty and Victory Bonds is selling at par or above, representing an increase of $2,000,000,000 in the value of government securities in 16 months. A refunding commission has been created for the purpose of getting foreign loans on a commercial basis. The interest rate at Federal Reserve Banks has been reduced until it is now 4.5 per cent.

The last year of Wilson's administration the actual cost of running the government was $2,538,000,000. The actual cost of running the government for the fiscal year just ended June 30 was $2,795,000,000. This is an actual saving of $1,743,000,000 which the Republican administration has effected in the routine expenditures of the government. This was possible because the Republican Congress early in its special session re-enacted a budget law which the previous Republican Congress had passed only to have a Democratic President veto it. It was cast by the most important piece of business legislation which has been enacted within this generation. After its enactment it was sensibly applied by the executive officers of the Republican administration.

The work of Congress, the wise administrative policies and the introduction of business methods by the departments in the conduct of public affairs have all combined to revive individual and corporate enterprise, so that today, in contrast to a year ago, unemployment has ceased to be a factor outside of those industries in which there are strikes. Agriculture is on its feet. Business is improving each day. Industrial output is increasing. Capital is going back to work in the channels of private and profitable enterprise. It really makes some difference at the end of a year whether the government has been controlled by an administration and a Congress that are generally right in contrast to an administration and Congress that were generally wrong.

The Republican party will go before the country this fall without any apology for this record. It is a record which needs no defense. The people are not going to stop the magnificent work so well begun. They are not going to retreat to the conditions which prevailed prior to March, 1921. They are not going to return the Democratic party to power and thereby restore the evil conditions which have been so largely corrected in the past 16 months of Republican control of the government.

3-MILE-A-MINUTE CAR AT STATE FAIR

The fastest automobile in the world, owned and piloted by Sig Haugdahl, a Minnesota boy, will be a feature attraction of the auto racing program at the Minnesota State Fair, September 2 to 9.

The outstanding machine invented by Haugdahl is only twenty inches wide but twenty foot long. It looks like a gigantic fish on dry land. Haugdahl has traveled in this car at a rate of 138 miles per hour. The rate of more than three miles per minute. At the same rate it would be possible, Haugdahl, acknowledged to be the greatest dirt track driver in the game, expects to break all world's records at the Minnesota State Fair auto racing meet, set on three days, September 2, 6, and 9. A score of the leading drivers of the world will compete in the race.

Gasoline Consumption Jumping

GASOLINE consumption during the month of June, 1922, was 20% greater than during the month of May, 1922, and considerably higher than June, 1921.

On June 1, 1922, there were in storage 856,607.102 gallons of gasoline, or 82 gallons for each of the 10,448,632 automobiles registered Jan. 1, 1922.

This means less gasoline per car in storage than for any similar period since 1918, with the single exception of the year 1920 when there were only 76.4 gallons per car.

The summer demand for gasoline is about double the lowest demand of the winter. If July and August consumption shows an increase proportionate to the June demand (as appears probable) stocks may be expected to decline rapidly.

However, because of its unrivaled facilities, the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) is equipped to handle the gasoline needs of its patrons throughout the Middle Western States it serves.

The refineries of this Company operate the year through in order that products will be ready when the heavy summer demand comes. At all times the Company attempts to have its field storage tanks full.

To maintain an abundant supply of gasoline at all points in the territory requires the unceasing efforts of 26,000 employees, the manufacturing capacity of 6 large refineries, the field storage at 3321 bulk stations, 1700 service stations, 215,000 iron barrels, and over 6600 tank wagon and delivery trucks.

The motorist who will think in terms of the unceasing streams of cars on the streets about him will quickly appreciate the magnitude of the task confronting the Standard Oil Company (Indiana). This task is far more difficult of performance in the Middle West than elsewhere in the United States because the number of cars per capita is greater and the mileage of these cars is greater.

Great as this undertaking is, the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) has proved equal to the job. As gasoline consumption increases, this Company provides facilities to meet it. It believes that this expansion of activity is an essential part of the service which it is expected to perform.

SYNOPSIS

FOREWORD—Mortimer, through Arizona, a party of customers, father and daughter, and a cowboy, who may witness a cattle round up. The girl leaves the car and is attracted by a wild steer. A masterpiece of riding on the part of one of the cowboys saves her life.

CHAPTER I—Clay Lindsay, ranger-riding on an Arizona ranch, announces his intention to visit the "big town," New York.

CHAPTER II—On the train Lindsay comes interested in a young woman, Kitty Mason, who has just become a million-dollar actress. She is introduced to him by Jerry Durand, a local politician and Lindsay's father. Lindsay and Kitty exchange a glance and throw Durand from the train.

CHAPTER III—On his first day in New York Lindsay is splashed with water by a janitor. This incident, the ranger punishes summarily and leaves the city to his disgust. A young woman who saves the actress by vital Clay into her house and hides him from the police.

CHAPTER IV—Clay's "rescue" brings Lindsay to meet her father, Clay Whitford, Lindsay's father, who has been seen by Kitty Mason in the city. She has been disappointed in her own aspirations and to support herself is selling "clay" via a salaried job.

CHAPTER V—Kitty is misled by a customer. Lindsay punishes the customer. After a lively mixing Lindsay escapes and a commission and a man.

CHAPTER VI—Lindsay's acquaintance with Jerry Durand, who has been introduced into Lindsay's life. He is introduced into Lindsay's life. He is introduced into Lindsay's life.

CHAPTER VII—Naturally indignant, the girls in Lindsay's life tell him the reason for his unkind treatment. Lindsay is told to go to the police. He is told to go to the police. He is told to go to the police.

CHAPTER VIII—Lindsay's father, who has been introduced into Lindsay's life. He is introduced into Lindsay's life. He is introduced into Lindsay's life.

CHAPTER IX—The Gangster Sees Red. Exactly thirty minutes after Clay had left him to break into the house, Johnnie lifted his gun and fired a shot at the police. He had fired a shot at the police. He had fired a shot at the police.

Out of the confused explanations of the ranger-riding the first policeman to reach him got two loud statements. "There's a white-slave," a straight girl. This hunter's eyes were fixed on the girl. This hunter's eyes were fixed on the girl. This hunter's eyes were fixed on the girl.

With Johnnie bringing up the rear they made a noisy attempt on the front door of Number 121. Almost immediately it was opened from the inside. Four men had come down the stairs in a headlong rush to cut off the escape of one who had outwitted and taunted them.

Those who wanted to get in and those who wanted to get out all tried to talk at once, but as soon as the police recognized Jerry Durand they gave him the floor.

"We're after a flat-walker," explained the expurgator. "He must be trying for a roof getaway." He turned and led the joint forces back up the stairs.

Things and officers surged up after him, carrying with them in their rush the runt. He presently found himself on the roof with those engaged in a man-hunt for his friend. When Clay shattered the window and disappeared inside after his escape from the roof, Johnnie gave a deep sigh of relief. This gun-play got his attention, since Lindsay was the target of it.

The handcuffed ranger-riding with the party ten minutes later when his scattered members drew together in tacit admission that the hunted man had escaped.

The gang leader was in a vile temper. If this story reached the newspapers all New York would be laughing at him. He could appeal to the police, have Clay Lindsay arrested, and get him sent up for a term on the charge of burglary. But he could not do it without the whole race coming out. One thing Jerry Durand could not stand was ridicule. His vanity was one of his outstanding qualities and he did not want it widely known that the boob he had intended to trap had turned the tables and had been handled him, jered at him and locked him in a room with his three henchmen.

Johnnie Green chose this malapropos moment for reminding the officers of the reason for the coming to the house.

"What about the young lady?" he asked solemnly. Durand glanced on him, looked him over with an insolent, malevolent eye, and jerked a thumb in his direction. "Who is this girl?"

"He's the fellow tipped us off his pal was inside," answered one of the patrolmen. He spoke in a confidential tone to the ear of Jerry. "Likely he knows more than he lets on. Shall I make a pinch?"

The eyes of the gang leader narrowed. "So he's a friend of this second-story bird is he?"

"Y'betcha," uttered up Johnnie, "and I'm plumb tickled to take his dust, too. Now, about this young lady—"

Jerry caught him hard on the side of the jaw with a short-arm jolt. The ranger-riding hit the pavement and slowly he got to his feet nursing his cheek.

"What you do that for, doggone it?" he demanded resentfully. "Me, I wasn't lookin' for no trouble. Me, I—"

Durand leaped at him across the sidewalk. His strong fingers closed on the throat of the bow-legged puncher.

The officers cried Jerry loose from his victim with the greatest difficulty. He tried furiously to get at him, lunging from the man who were holding his arms.

"The puncher snuck helplessly against the wall. "He's got all he can carry, Mr. Durand," one of the bluecoats said, soothingly. "You don't wanta croak the little guy. Gimme the word, an' I'll run him in for a drunk."

Jerry shook his head. "Nope. Let him go, Pete."

The policeman walked up to the runt and caught him roughly by the arm. "Move along out here. I'd ought to pinch you, but I'm not gonna do it this time, see? You beat it!"

Durand turned to one of his followers. "Tall that fellow, find out where he's stayin' and report."

Helplessly Johnnie went staggering down the street. He did not understand why he had to be treated so, but the instinct of self-preservation carried him out of the danger zone without argument about it. Even as he wobbled away he was looking with an wavering faith to his friend to fight his wrongs. Clay would fix this fellow Durand for what he had done to him.

Clay did his best under the handicap of a lack of extent between him and the authorities to search New York for Kitty. He used the personal columns until he had known who he got in touch with taxicab drivers, ticket-collectors, postmen, and station guards. All the time he knew that in such a maze as Manhattan it would be a miracle if he found her.

But miracles are made possible by miracle-workers. The Wanderer was a sixty-horse-power dynamo of energy. He felt responsible for Kitty and he gave himself single-minded devotion to the job of discovering her.

"She's got me," Kitty at last it was quite by chance. As it happened, Beatrice was present at the time.

He had been giving a box party at the Empire. The gay little room was gathered under the awning outside the foyer while the limousine that was to take them to the club was waiting. The girl who had been called Colin Whitford looking down into the net that potted down, uttered an exclamatory "My Joyce!"

"It was just a moment ago," he said. "A woman was looking out of that doorway at us," he said. "If she's not in deep water, she's a bad guesser. I thought for a moment that she was one of us. She started to reach out her hands and then shrank back. "Young or old?" asked the caller.

"Young—a girl." "It was just a moment ago," he said. "It was just a moment ago," he said. "It was just a moment ago," he said.

But the woman had gone, swallowed in the smallness of a side street. Clay turned to her father, eye-brows lifted. There was a moment's awkward silence.

"Mr. Lindsay will be back presently," Whitford said. "We'll get in contact for him out of the way a little further up the street."

When Clay rejoined them he talked to a low voice with Beatrice's father. The middle man looked agreement and Lindsay turned to the others.

"I'm called away," he explained about if Whitford has kindly promised to play host to my party. I'm right sorry to leave, but it's urgent."

His grave smile beckoned Beatrice to be charitable to her findings. The eye or she gave him were coldly hostile. He knew Beatrice did not and would not say this about her.

The girl was waiting where Clay had left her, crouched against a base-aluminum door under the shelter of the steps.

"I've looked for you everywhere," he said. "It's been—awful." "I know, but it's not my fault. I'm right now, Kitty," he conformed. "You're goin' home with me tonight. Tomorrow we'll talk it all over."

He tucked an arm under hers and led her along the wet, shining street to a taxicab. She crouched in a corner of the cab, her body shaken with sobs.

The young man moved closer and put his arms around her shoulders. "Don't you worry, Kitty. You're brother is on the job now."

He knew her story now in its essence, so well as to him in confession, and because she was who she was, born to lead on a stronger will, he acquitted her of blame.

CHAPTER X

Johnnie Makes a Joke. As Kitty stepped from the cab she was trembling violently.

"Don't you be frightened, I'll protect you," she came home. There won't anybody hurt you here."

The Arizona ran her up to his floor in the automatic elevator. "I've got a friend from home stayin' with me. He's the best-hearted fellow you ever saw. You'll sure like him."

He told her without stopping he fitted his key to the lock. In another moment Lindsay was introducing her exactly to the embarrassed and astonished joint proprietor of the apartment.

The runt was content and in his stockinged-feet. He has been playing a delectful duty on a month-long. Caught so unexpectedly, he blushed a beautiful pink red to his neck.

"Heat your nose, Johnnie, and make a good stiff toddy. Miss Kitty has been out in the rain."

The Runt Was Content and in His Stockinged-Feet.

which were tea, fried potatoes, ham, eggs, and buttered toast.

The girl ate ravenously. It was as easy to eat as she had to eat. And Clay kept up a flow of talk, mostly about Johnnie's ordinary triumphs. Meanwhile he made up a bed on the couch.

Once she looked up at him, her throat swollen with emotion. "You're good."

"Shut! We been mendin' a lit sister to brace up our manners for us. It's lucky for us I found you. Now I expect you're tired and sleepy. We fixed up your bed in here because it's warmer. You'll be able to make out with all right. The springs are good."

Clay left her with a cheerful smile. "Then you can sleep tight and warm, Miss Colorado. Sleep tight and warm, Miss Colorado. Sleep tight and warm, Miss Colorado."

The cattlemann knew he had found her in the nick of time. She had told him that she had no money, no room in which to sleep, no prospect of work. Everything she had except the clothes on her back had been pawned to buy food and clothing. But she was young and resilient. When she got back to the country where she had belonged, time would dilute from her mind the experiences of which she had been the victim.

It was past midday when Kitty awoke. She found her clothes dry. After she dressed she opened the door that led to the kitchen. Johnnie began to breathe about in preparation for her breakfast.

"Please don't trouble. I'll eat what you've got cooked," she begged.

"It's no trouble, m'am. It's sure a thing on earth I enjoy doin'. It's sure a thing on earth I enjoy doin'. It's sure a thing on earth I enjoy doin'."

"Either way. Whichever you like, Mr. Green."

While she ate he waited on her so politely. Inside, he was a river of tears for her, but with it went a good deal of his own. Even now, wan-eyed and hollow-cheeked, she was attractive. In Johnnie's innocent life he had never before felt so close to a girl as he did to this one.

"I don't like to be so much bother to you," she said. "Maybe I can go away this afternoon."

"No, m'am, we won't have that a-tall," broke in the ranger-riding in alarm. "We're plumb tickled to have you here. Clay, he feels thataway too."

"I could keep house for you while I stay," she suggested timidly. "I know how to cook—and the place does need cleaning."

"Sure it do, Say, what's the matter with you bein' Clay's sister. Jus' get in last night on the train? That's the story we'll put up to the landlord if you'll gimme the word."

Johnnie told the story of the search for her, with special emphasis on the night when he had found her in the answer to her advertisement.

"I never wrote it. I never thought of it. It must have been."

"It was that scoundrag Durand, y'betcha. I ain't still wearin' my pin-fleethers none. He was sore because Clay had fixed his check-book."

"I've got no place to go, except back home—and I've got no folks there but a second cousin. She doesn't want me. I don't know what to do. If I had a woman friend—none one to tell me what was best—"

Johnnie slung his hand on his knee, struck by a sudden inspiration. "Say! Y'betcha, by Jollies, I've got 'er—the very one! You're doin'—you're doin'—you're doin'—"

Clay and me, the finest little pilgrim in New York. She's sure there when the gone strikes. You'd for her. I'll fix it for you—right away. I got to go to her house this afternoon an' do some chores. I'll bet she comes right over to see you."

Kitty was doubtful. "Maybe we better wait and speak to Mr. Lindsay about it," she said.

"No, m'am, you don't know Miss Beatrice. She's the best friend I ever had. I shouldn't wonder but that she and Clay might get married one o' these days. He thinks a lot of her."

"I know you know just a little more of human nature than the puncher. Then I wouldn't tell her about me if I was you. She wouldn't like my looks here."

"No! You don't know Miss Beatrice. She goes 'way up. I'll bet she likes you fine."

When Lindsay left to go to work that afternoon he took with him a resolution to try and see her. Beatrice Whitford. She would fix things all right. If there was one person on earth Lindsay could bank on without fail it was his little boss.

Clay kept trying to understand her. Her manner had a touch of steel, almost of contempt, while she listened to his tale.

The asked no questions and made no comments. What he had to tell her with still silence. Johnnie's glib narrative had made him feel that she had not brought a drink for her midnight, had mixed a drink for her and had given her his own clothes to wear. He had not come. Somehow the suddenness of the bath and bedroom slippers obtained singly from his friend's story. Even the runt got this. He began to perceive himself a helpless muddle of wrong impressions.

"I suppose you know that when the manager of your apartment house finds out she's there he'll send her packing," so Beatrice summed up when she spoke at last.

"No, m'am, I reckon not. You see we done told him she is Clay's sister. He's got in from the West; the puncher explained.

"Oh, I see!" The girl's lip curled and her chin tilted a trifle. "You don't seem to have overlooked anything. No, I don't think I care to have anything to do with your arrangements."

Beatrice turned and walked swiftly into the house. A pulse of anger was beating in her soft throat. She felt a sense of outrage. To Clay Lindsay she had given herself generously in spirit. She had risked something in introducing him to her friends. They might have laughed at him for his slight social lapses. They might have rejected him for his lack of background. They had done neither. It was as genuine a man that he had won his way to stantly.

Pricking up and down her room, little Beatrice clenched, her soul in resentment.
